

GrowIn' Paris – Visit to the Gardening house of Paris

Paris – January 17, 2010

Last Sunday, the GrowIn' group in Paris went to visit the Gardening house in Paris. This house is a small museum that offers workshops to schools or individuals. It is practice-oriented, and proposes many useful tips on how to get things grown in cities. It has a nice library with many interesting books. The high schools from the surrounding come here to plant a few veggies and harvest them after spring.

The sun was shining bright and made us feel like spring was eagerly waiting to start.

The place was small, but it was cute and many nice ideas were displayed. We were delighted to see that such a place can exist right in the middle of a huge city like Paris, and we realized how these little spots of nature can influence positively an urban area. We walked out full of inspiration. We then gathered for some time around a cup of cake and a tea to discuss future projects, and start planning to order some seeds to plant in the beginning of Spring.

Bruno facing an urban scarecrow

Noël and Aurore during the visit